Biographical Sketch

RAMON ALBERTO L. GARILAO is finishing his Master of ASEAN Studies at the University of the Philippines Open University (UPOU). He earned his Bachelor of Arts in Film from the University of the Philippines Film Institute (UPFI) and had internship experience at the Green Age Film Production in Yangon, Myanmar. He is an alumnus of the Asian Film Academy (AFA) and a fellow of the Salzburg Global Seminar's Young Cultural Innovators (YCI) forum.

In 2013, he received the Global Korea Scholarship (GKS) for a year-long Visual Design studies at the University of Seoul, South Korea. His undergraduate thesis film "Fish Out of Water" (2016), which was based on his research on Korean-Filipino children, migration studies, and multiculturalism in South Korea, bagged the best thesis award and won several recognitions in and outside the country.

A member of the Philippine International Studies Organization (PHISO) and Philippines Communication Society (PCS), his primary focus includes global media flows, international communication, cultural policy-diplomacy, and decolonial studies. He is a board member of the Society of Filipino Archivists for Film (SOFIA), and an executive council member of the National Committee on Cinema (NCC) – National Commission for Culture and the Arts.

Mon is a linguaphile and continues to expand his vocabularies in the following languages: Filipino (Native Proficiency), English (Bilingual Proficiency), Korean (Limited Working Proficiency), Bahasa Indonesia (Limited Working Proficiency), and Filipino Sign Language (Elementary Proficiency).

Acknowledgments

I wouldn't be able to reach this far without the help of several people and institutions that inspired me to stay focused and dedicated on my quest to study the complex intersections of global media flows, power, and regional integration.

I am most grateful to my thesis committee for the guidance and for trusting me with my chosen research topic. I am proud to have Dr. Alexander Gonzalez Flor as my adviser, whom I first encountered online as faculty-in-charge of my ASEAN 231 (Communication and Media in the ASEAN Context) course, where I gained a deeper understanding of media's impact on regional integration. Your essays and publications guided me the most at times when I found myself lost in the sea of academic papers and parlance.

Dr. Grace Javier Alfonso, an ever-patient and supportive mentor since my Film 199 (Research in Film) undergraduate course. Thank you very much, Ma'am Gigi, for continuously believing in me and pushing me to pursue the field of study that I truly want.

Dr. Jean A. Saludadez, for always answering my concerns about the ASEAN Studies program. Coming from an Arts background, research was not really my forte. But the readings you provided gave me the confidence to finish this degree. As you always mention, our program is the most difficult one as we needed to complete several requirements: a comprehensive exam, a thesis presentation, a manuscript, and a publishable article. Thank you so much for being present every step of the way.

Dr. Eva Marie Wang (Ate Eva), for always accommodating my questions concerning the wider world. Your critical perspectives and works on decolonial studies had so much impact on my research career. I consider your thinking an influential school of thought. Thank you for sharing with me your feisty worldviews, particularly on the asymmetric power imbalances enveloping our contemporary world.

Consul General Roderico Atienza (Sir Deric), Dr. Ronel O. Laranjo (Kuya Ron), and Sir Mark Ysla (Kuya Mark), thank you for continuously cheering me on since 2013 in Korea. I'm lucky to have met great thinkers while doing my graduate studies. I look up to all of you as I now move toward the future. Ate Helweena Sadorra, I still keep in mind all our talks on cultural waves, power relations, language, and identity. Thank you for introducing the lens of Philippine Studies, and for making me recalibrate the way I look at global media.

Jayr, Ket, Dianne, and Paige, I am very grateful to have the four of you since grade school. Thank you for keeping me sane with all the memes, jokes, K-pop trivia, adulting lifehacks, and TikTok videos. I am now nearing the end of the #RoadToMasternim! Thank you for always inspiring me to do better.

Jaffy, Axl, and Jules, the support system I gained during my stay as Culture and Arts Officer at the National Commission for Culture and the Arts. Thank you for all the books on Southeast Asia, the academic paper recommendations, thoughts on cultural industries, and ideas on local policies concerning culture and the arts.

Direk Yves and Xzy, thank you for always being on the go and accepting my random online rants when I needed a break from all the readings and writings in the past three years. Karen, for listening to my issues on cultural waves since 2019 circa Produce x101 series. Let's remember not to give up pogihaji ma sumji ma bicheul hyanghae naga.

My colleagues at The Japan Foundation, Manila, especially Carlos-san and Sky-san, for hearing my thoughts on international communication and media flows. Thank you very much for all the intellectual discussions! Thank you as well to Ben-san, Tanaka-san, Abe-san, Kanami-san, Spike-san, Thea-san, and Mariah-san for allowing me to grow as a scholar within the institution.

Abstract

In investigating the emerging scholarship called ASEAN Wave, which first appeared in 2019 at the inaugural issue of the ASEAN-Korea Journal, this study aims to expand the literature by problematizing the state of ASEAN audiovisual content on the global streaming platform Netflix. By using catalog analysis to examine 1047 Southeast Asian titles present in the platform from April 14 to May 7, 2022, and by dissecting the Netflix Top 10 data covering 43 weeks from July 4, 2021 to May 1, 2022, findings suggest that there are very few ASEAN titles available in the region amounting to only 2-10% on the catalogs of six ASEAN Member States (AMS), and four countries with only one or no content available. Additionally, this study revealed the status of USA films and South Korean TV shows as the most viewed content in the region dominating the Top 10 lists of all AMS Netflix catalogs. These findings imply that the ASEAN audiovisual media does not fare well in Netflix, and as a response, this study proposes recommendations with the hopes of developing the ASEAN audiovisual media industry as a leading component of the ASEAN Wave, and as a potential competitor of two opposing cultural waves: USA's Hollywood and South Korea's Hallyu. Lastly, this study proposes future directions for ASEANOLOGY scholars on how to further advance studies on the ASEAN Wave, and eventually help in the realization of the ASEAN Community.

Chapter 1

INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background and Statement of the Problem

This research stems from my personal quest to map the intraregional media flow of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) in the age of Subscription Video-on-Demand (SVOD) platforms as an initial step to understand the current nature of the emerging field of inquiry known as the “ASEAN Wave.” Global media flow studies have increased in the past decade due to the rapid changes in the global media environment. Studies on media flow or the “diffusion of media content in global markets” (Chandler & Munday, 2011) specifically looks at how audio-visual media travel and circulate, and are being distributed and consumed in an ever-changing, interdependent, and highly-globalized world. Currently, we are in “a complex terrain of multi-vocal, multimedia and multi-directional flows” (Thussu, 2006) wherein information from multiple points are constantly being transmitted real-time with the help of digital technologies such as the internet. In the context of the ASEAN, facilitating greater information flow is deemed an “important priority of regional cooperation” as it plays a key role in raising ASEAN awareness and in providing updates on the benefits of ASEAN developments to the citizens of its member states (Information and Media, n.d.).

The term ASEAN Wave first appeared in the inaugural issue of the ASEAN-Korea Journal back in 2019. Broadly, it was defined in comparison to the Korean Wave, or the rise of Korean creative content initially within the East Asian region, but has now travelled beyond various national borders. Yoon (2019) identified three pillars guiding the rise of the “ASEAN Phenomenon in Korea”: (1) migration, (2) studying abroad, and (3) tourism, arguing that the intersections of these three factors amplified the exposure of the ASEAN culture in Korea, eventually paving the way for the ASEAN Wave to get traction. This phenomenon, as argued by the journal, is currently manifested in the proliferation of ASEAN food culture in their country. However, what really is this “Wave” and why is it so important? I posit that a cultural wave can be broadly defined as the influx of a country’s cultural products and creative content across national borders. While a cultural flow shares a similar thought, I encourage a deeper take on the word “influx” as this differentiates the two related concepts by a thin line. We can visualize a “wave” like a tsunami, which in this sense, is the surge of foreign cultural products, commodities, and ideologies to a particular physical geographic territory or to borderless virtual cyberspaces. Media platforms, in this context, takes on the crucial role of being channels and avenues which allow creative content to flow, evolve, and disseminate at a faster rate.

If the ASEAN-Korea Journal is correct in claiming the presence of such a cultural force, then there is a need for scholars from the developing world to study the ASEAN Wave phenomenon. Currently, most of the studies about the ASEAN focus more on the political and economic pillars of the organization (Vu, 2013), which could be due to the fact that the ASEAN was initially created as a political and economic bloc bonded with the common goals of countering the rise of communism, preventing the aggressive external forces to penetrate the region post-Cold War, and as a step towards further economic cooperation to stabilize the fluctuating markets of the region. As the ASEAN leaders developed the vision of the organization by signing the Bali Concord II in 1976, the ASEAN Community expanded to promote further integration in all aspects, including the socio-cultural pillar which has since been regarded as the core element of regional community building. Committed to the goal of developing an ASEAN Identity, the ASEAN Committee for Culture and Information (ASEAN-COCI) was established in 1978 to “promote effective cooperation in the fields of culture and information for the purpose of enhancing mutual understanding and solidarity among the peoples of ASEAN as well as in furthering regional development” (Severino, 2010). The ASEAN-COCI has acknowledged the importance of mass media in strengthening regional integration, and has developed programs to promote interaction among ASEAN artists and media practitioners to generally raise ASEAN awareness and to generate a positive perception of ASEAN among its citizens.

Following the goals of the organization, can the scholarship and development of an ASEAN Wave further advance the realization of an ASEAN Community? If so, then how do we study this emergent phenomenon? The answer lies in how various scholars viewed similar phenomena in the past. In the open forum article of the ASEAN-Korea Journal, Yang Woo-yeon, senior manager of CJ ENM, and Hon. Jasmine Lee, a Filipina and a Former Member of the National Assembly of Korea, underscored the important role of Over-the-Top (OTT) platforms, such as YouTube, Viu, and Netflix in the continuing popularity of the Korean Wave worldwide as these platforms now became sites of interaction where Korean culture spreads globally and connects deeply with the audiences. Within the scope of ASEANOLOGY, understanding the state of ASEAN media in OTT platforms could provide an initial step in the study of such a phenomenon. Does the flow of ASEAN media content have a similar potential to increase the popularity and interest of the global community in ASEAN? Do ASEAN content get equal representation similar to Western and Eastern content in global OTT platforms?

1.2. Research Objectives

To open a more objective discourse on the ASEAN Wave under the context of regional integration studies, this research looks at the state of the intraregional audiovisual media flow of ASEAN content, or the flow of films and TV shows among the ten ASEAN Member States, on the OTT platform Netflix, which is recognized as the biggest OTT platform worldwide in terms of catalog size. Intentionally, this study will not look at the nature of ASEAN media content outside the region (ex. the state of ASEAN media in South Korea or America) as the ultimate aim of this paper is to first establish links between the intraregional ASEAN media flow and ASEAN integration to somehow contribute to this emerging newly-coined phenomenon, the ASEAN Wave. There is a need for scholars from the developing world to study such phenomenon as such is a potential cultural force that could bring the regional bloc closer to realizing its vision for a stronger, more connected Southeast Asian region.

A huge amount of literature on media flow studies focus on investigating the effects of western dominant flows to developing countries. When the term contra-flow was introduced by international communication scholar Daya Kishan Thussu in 2007, the focus of the literatures shifted to investigating smaller or alternative flows from the Third World. Particularly, media flow studies from India, South America, Middle East, and Africa became notably visible in academic discourses. In the context of the ASEAN, studies on media flow were scant and often times very country-specific, giving only focus to traditional media platforms such as broadcast television and films. The advancement in internet technology and the emergence of OTT platforms demands an updating of the literature to include an intraregional-focused media flow specifically within the context of the ASEAN.

Netflix, considered as the biggest OTT platform in terms of catalog size, is an important case study as it is widely available in 130 countries covering all member states of the ASEAN. Exploring the state of ASEAN media flow in this platform is an initial step to fill this literature gap, and to encourage scholarship of the ASEAN in global media flow studies.

Specifically, this research focuses on the following questions to open an inquiry on this emerging field of knowledge in the context of the ASEAN media landscape:

1. What is the state of ASEAN media in Netflix?
2. What are the factors influencing this state?
3. What are the implications of the state of ASEAN media in Netflix to the realization of an ASEAN Community?

1.3. Purpose of the Study

While the existence of an ASEAN Wave is still contested primarily due to the fact that there aren't enough literatures on this field, this research attempts to add to this scholarship by investigating the state of ASEAN media in the current global media landscape dominated by online streaming platforms and services, specifically by Netflix. By looking at how ASEAN media flows and circulates in the region, this study surveys and provides an objective data on this emerging field of inquiry within the discipline of ASEANOLOGY. Throughout this study, I will use the term media to refer mainly to audiovisual media content, particularly of films and TV shows, and will not touch on news and other forms of media. Currently, no comprehensive and collective study has been conducted on the state of ASEAN content in Netflix as most of the studies available are country-specific case studies of the platform in the region. Once a panoramic view of the state of ASEAN media in the region has been provided and analyzed in connection to ASEAN community-building, then this research has achieved its purpose. For years, dominant media flows from the developing world have surged in the global media environment, and this study will bring the ASEAN into the picture of global media flows studies.

Chapter 2

Review of Related Literature

This chapter will look into the current corpus of literature on Netflix in the ASEAN. Divided into three sections, the first part will look into the development of Netflix from its early beginnings to becoming the biggest global streaming platform and its position in the ASEAN region; the second part will look at the ASEAN's audiovisual industry particularly the current literatures on ASEAN television and cinema; and the third section will examine the current literature on Netflix studies, particularly how scholars are viewing the rise of Netflix as a global platform.

2.1. Netflix in the ASEAN

Netflix is an SVOD platform that is presently “the major global SVOD service” (Lobato, 2019). It was founded in 1997 by Reed Hastings and Marc Randolph in California initially as a mail-order DVD rental service. SVOD services provide a “curated library of content for a monthly subscription fee” (Lobato, 2019). Examples of companies that offer SVOD services are Netflix, Amazon Prime Video, Hulu, HBO, Disney+, Viu, and WeTV. Accessible through the internet, these SVOD platforms allow audiovisual content from various parts of the world to be viewed at any place and time, so long as viewers subscribe to a payment scheme, have access to the internet, and have ample devices such as laptops, computers, smartphones, tablets, and smart televisions.

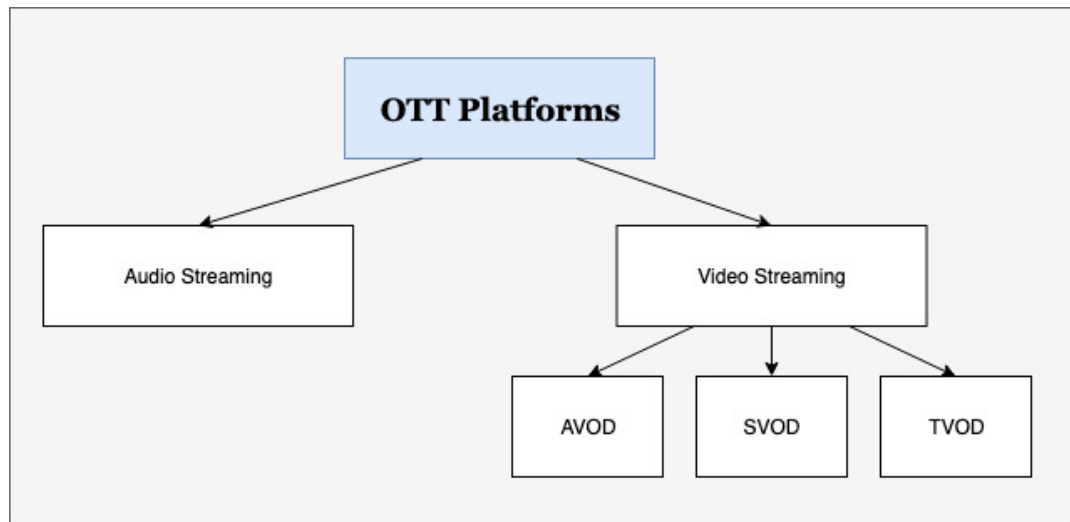

Like any other business, Netflix saw the potential of advancing its services across national borders. Their international rollout initially began with Canada and Latin America, and eventually expanded to various territories including Western Europe (2013-2015), Japan (2015), and Australiasia (2015) (Lobato, 2019). In 2016, Netflix's Reed Hastings and Ted Sarandos announced in their keynote speech at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) that their streaming service will now operate in 130 countries, except Crimea, North Korea, and Syria due to U.S. government restrictions, indicating the birth of "a global TV network" (Netflix, 2016). Netflix became accessible to the ASEAN region during the first quarter of 2016, which disrupted the local SVOD streaming service market currently operating in the region. iflix, a Malaysian streaming platform, was one of the first Southeast Asian SVODs to emerge in the region even before the arrival of Netflix in 2016.

The decision to penetrate the ASEAN is a strategic one primarily because the region is a "very mobile-centric market" (Arora, 2020 as cited in Potkin, 2020). With a combined population of 655 million, the influx of portable smart devices in Southeast Asia generated a new consumer market coupled with the emerging middle-class population and their increasing demand for entertainment content (Netflix, 2016). The ASEAN Telecommunications and Regulations Council (ATRC), the ASEAN sectoral body in charge of ensuring a level-playing field within the telecommunications sector, also took notice of this rising consumption of online content in the region and has convened since 2017 to discuss how to properly approach Over-the-Top (OTT) services of their possible repercussions, especially in the economic and social aspects of the region including competition, licensing taxation, social harmony, consumer and privacy protection, and concerns about the spread of false information. ATRC viewed the rise of OTT, the digital applications or services operated over internet networks, especially online video and TV content, as "a cause for concern especially over how to properly regulate them" (Tortermvasana & Leesa-nguansuk, 2019). There are three types of OTT platforms: Advertisement-

1. AVOD allows users to freely log in and stream videos online in return for spending time watching advertisements. The best example of an AVOD is YouTube where ads are injected before, in between, and after each video content for monetization.
2. SVOD, on the other hand, offers a subscription scheme service to allow users to have access and watch the entire catalog of the service until the expiration of the subscription. Netflix is an example of an SVOD platform wherein viewers interested to watch their content must avail of its subscription plans. In the Philippines, four plans are available: Mobile (₱149/mo), Basic (₱369/mo), Standard (₱459/mo), Premium (₱549/mo). Access to content varies per subscription plan.
3. TVOD allows users to pay based on the amount of the content watched or streamed. If users only want to watch a specific film, such service will only bill the content that they will consume. An example of this is iTunes where viewers are allowed to choose the movie that they want to watch and pay for it to have access, not necessarily getting access to the whole catalog of the service.

In 2020, Netflix recorded more than a million subscribers from Southeast Asia, of its nearly 200 million subscribers around the world (Potkin, 2020). Consequently, during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, the number of SVOD subscribers across platforms grew exponentially as the global community was forced to stay at home and find alternative sources of entertainment. In the May 2022 first quarter report of Media Partners Asia (2022), “Southeast Asia (SEA) added 2.8 million net new SVOD subscriptions in Q1 2022 to reach an aggregate customer base of 39.5 million total subs.” The pandemic opened a lot of opportunities for OTT platforms to rise in popularity while additionally prompting the world to rapidly transition to digital. The ASEAN has become a strategic market in terms of OTT services subscription and consumption. However, while the region initially used huge amounts of foreign media products, “regional and national efforts since the 1970s have lessened the foreign impact upon mass communication, and, in the process, created local media products” (Lent, 1990). To date, foreign audiovisual content continues to dominate the ASEAN media landscape, but a look at the scholarship of global media flow studies introduces the concept of “contra-flows” or the alternative media flows from developing countries. These contra-flows challenge the notion of a “one-way street” media flow or media imperialism, which are crucial in the development of the global audiovisual media environment. There is a need to understand the current scholarship on the global media flows to be able to better locate the mobility of contemporary ASEAN films and TV shows.

2.2. Current Landscape of Global Media Flow Studies

There is a growing literature in global media flow studies. Iordache et.al., (2019) extensively studied thirty flow studies on film and television programs in an attempt to assess whether the methods used in each literature are still relevant especially due to the recent developments in the online distribution and consumption of audiovisual content. Currently, the rise of SVOD platforms drastically changed the way content and information travel across national borders as compared to previously limited conditions set by local television broadcasting companies.

The importance of studying media flows is best enunciated by Castells (1996) when he argued how our contemporary lives are built around and are dominated by “flows,” particularly “flows of capital, flows of information, flows of technology, flows of organizational interactions, flows of images, sounds, and symbols.” The concept of flows has also been thoroughly studied by one of the foremost scholars of globalization, Arjun Appadurai (1990) in his influential essay Disjuncture and Difference in the Global Cultural Economy, where he enumerated five dimensions through which we can understand how globalization or the complex flow of culture in the world occurs: (1) ethnoscapes - flow of people, (2) technoscapes - flow of technology, (3) financescapes - flow of money and businesses, (4) mediascapes - flow of media and images, and (5) ideoscapes - flow of ideologies.

Mediascapes could further be referred to as the distribution of various forms of media that disseminate information such as films, TV shows, magazines, and newspapers, and the images of the world created by these media (Appadurai, 1990).

Distribution is a way to allow flows to occur in media, and “there are dominant international media flows and there are smaller, contra-flows that make up the global spectrum of media flows” (Thussu, 2006).

Media flow scholars look at the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) New World Information and Communication Order (NWICO) report by Nordenstreng & Varis (1974) entitled “Television Traffic: A One-Way Street?” as the genesis of global media flow research. The study sparked the debate over the ‘free flow of information’ and the imbalance in global communication flows (Iordache, 2019), which has shaped the discussion on the topic for decades to come. It claimed that there is no “true exchange of information” as television media and content from the Global North dominate over the programming of media content in the Global South. Nordenstreng & Varis (1974) analyzed the programming of TV content in 50 countries to discover the proportions of domestically produced and imported programs in each TV profile per country. From their study emerged several strands of research focused on international flows of content.

This claim of a unidirectional flow of media by Nordenstreng & Varis (1974) gave birth to alternative arguments in international communication, particularly the contra-flow concept which challenged the position of earlier literature regarding their arguments of a one-way flow (Thussu, 2006). The contra-flow thesis claims that while the media content from the Global North dominates the media industries of the developing countries, smaller “subaltern” flows from the Global South are emerging brought by the advancement of digital technologies, which opened other channels in the complex sphere of global media. For example, now, the SVOD platform Netflix allows subscribers from developed countries such as the US to view films and TV shows from developing regions such as the ASEAN. In this age where the online distribution of content is abundant, media from developing countries are flowing rapidly transnationally, and are capable of providing voices from the margins through various platforms. While it is true that there are dominant flows in the global media sphere, Thussu (2006) posits that global media traffic is not just one way (from the West to the rest): “The availability of digital technology, privatized and deregulated broadcasting and satellite networks has enabled the increasing flow of content from the global South to the North, for example, the growing international visibility of Indian films.”

Much has transpired theoretically in the study of global media since the television flow studies of Nordenstreng & Varis (1974), which have been thoroughly discussed by Lordache et. al., (2019). This debate on the one-way media flow and contra-flow centers on the importance of media as having the power to influence its viewers. If media content from developed countries dominates the flow and content in developing countries, then they can also dominate the opinions and information circulating within local environments. There is a need for the stories from the Global South to be given platform and representation to allow diverse information to flow in the mediascape. It will be harder for contra-flows to make an impact in the global media landscape if media from the Global North continue to dominate. Therefore, the study of media flow is also connected to the study of power. The more dominant the flow is — the more resources it has to produce and distribute audiovisual content — the more prominent it will be in the global media landscape, therefore allowing for dominant ideologies to travel better and disseminate their information to global viewers. Now that media flows are established as avenues of power, an inquiry on the media flows within the region is crucial in understanding its possible effects on the realization of an ASEAN community.

2.3. Media Flow and ASEAN Integration

Cultural transmission has been a very crucial aspect in the ongoing formation of the ASEAN Community and mass media can help strengthen the social fabric by employing one of its social roles: “to create a popular culture that includes customs, fads, fashions, folk songs, pop tunes, folk art, pop art, lingo, technology, norms, beliefs, personalities, and even superstitions” (Maslog, 2014 as cited in Gonzales-Flor, 2019). While the regional bloc is still considered a “work-in-progress” (Bee, 2016), at the core of this study are several works of literature from various scholars, especially Southeast Asian academics in the field of mass communication and international relations, who have already established the significant role of mass media in the ASEAN integration. Although scant, the available literature agrees that the media has the power to amplify awareness and strengthen efforts on regional integration.

The ASEAN is regarded as an “imagined community” (Acharya, 2017), and as a developing region, a “collective mind” molded by societal communication is needed to further strengthen regional identity (Flor, 1995). The European Union has this mindset, however, the “ASEAN sense of self” is absent and difficult to achieve due to the stark difference in the member states’ cultures and traditions. To aid these differences amidst the digital divide and uneven regional media landscape (Flor, 2008; Abd & Basir, 2016), increased communication and interaction between the member states, and ASEAN media should be facilitated through various forms (Chongkittavorn, 2013).

The ASEAN Secretariat acknowledges audiovisual types of media such as films and TV shows as effective vehicles of cultural exchange (Information and Media, n.d.). To attest to the positive impact of TV dramas, Ahn (2016) studied how media consumption of Vietnamese nationals of Filipino and Thai dramas helps in the realization of the ASEAN Community. Similarly, Kamonwan (2017) looked at how Thai citizens learn about ASEAN cultures through the TV program “ASEAN Together” produced by Thailand. Thai citizens, in general, have a positive outlook on their regional neighbors because of mass media (Panyasopon, 2016). In an earlier study, Hassan & Ahmad (2009) looked at the ASEAN content TV programming of government-owned Malaysian channels and the factors affecting the viewers' perceptions of these programs. They found that cultural proximity played a huge part in why Malaysian nationals watch ASEAN dramas/films and that the attraction to such content especially comes from the similarities and differences of cultural values portrayed in ASEAN productions. De la Rosa (2015), in their study of ASEAN films, emphasized the importance of audiovisual content in engendering the ASEAN Identity, which will further lead to the realization of the ASEAN Community.

The media's role in integration is also a subject of inquiry in various parts of the world. In Australia, media's impact on identity formation was studied by Ewart (2000), who concludes that media plays a central role in “constructing and cementing the identity and culture of communities and their publics.” Similarly, in Africa, the East Africa Community (EAC) considers media as a “disseminating agent of integrationist ideas” which can promote awareness of the process of integration and might aid in the construction of regional identity (Mang'era, 2014). A notable point in the EAC study stressed the East African region's desire to elevate itself from years of colonial past, highly valuing the role of mass media as a tool to bring the concepts of integration to the masses. Earlier literature also discusses regional media integration in Africa which examines the actual continental integration of media entities to further provide information to the African region (Churchill, 1991).

However, the study argues that the creation of smaller regional entities would be more effective as it follows the assumption that “information is more meaningful to people within a certain geographical, historical, political and cultural matrix.” To note, the African region has various sub-regional economic communities such as EAC, UDEAC, ECOWAS, and ECCAS.

Most of the available research about media’s role in the European Union points to its importance in disseminating information about the Eurointegration discourse (Trenz, 2008; Scharkow & Vogelgesang, 2010; Marshall, 2011;). In Ukraine, perspectives like Belyakov (2010) criticize the Ukrainian media for its lack of coverage of European Integration even though such a topic is important to the nation. Ukraine is not part of the EU and promoting the regional organization’s role to Ukrainians would help in raising public awareness of the benefits and concerns in the event the country joins the EU.

Likewise in the Arab World, the realization of potentially achieving Arab unity has been a product of the decades spent in developing pan-Arab mass media infrastructures under the Arab League (Muhsin, 1992). However, their dependence on external sources and programming affected the kind of content the citizens of the region consume. In a 1983 survey on television flows, USA content dominates over locally-produced ones (Kandill, 2015). “In the television era, Western cultures have been so overwhelming that ‘there is very little that is uniquely Arab in Arab world television’ (Boyd, 1982, as cited in Kandill, 2015).

There is no doubt that mass media plays an important role in regional integration processes. In the context of the ASEAN, this research attempts to connect global media flow studies to the concept of regional integration and tries to explore the current state of ASEAN media on the popular SVOD platform Netflix.

Today, Netflix has become an important space for cultures to travel where subscribers from various parts of the world can access a huge catalog of audiovisual content from various parts of the world. The rise of SVOD platforms demands new approaches on how to study global media flows particularly because previous studies on television flows, including satellite and cable, focused more on the programming of content which has been restricted by channel scheduling and geographical territories (Lobato, 2019). With the advent of the internet, media content now flows multidirectional, multilinear, and simultaneously bypassing several nation-state territories. Viewers do not need to wait for the screening of scheduled programs, instead through the internet, they can access the catalogs of the platform to watch transnational media content instantly. A deeper look into the intraregional flows of ASEAN media, and questioning whether ASEAN content reaches the ASEAN people, would help determine the possible gaps to address in realizing the dream of full regional integration.

2.4. ASEAN Netflix and Catalog Analysis

The corpus of literature specifically on ASEAN media flows is scant. To expand the literature, this research looks at the current state of ASEAN media focusing on Netflix territories in the ASEAN region — the ten ASEAN member states. Currently, no comprehensive study on the Netflix catalog of each ASEAN member state has been made. Such an approach is crucial in understanding the current nature of Southeast Asian content online. The rise of Netflix in Southeast Asia poses various opportunities and challenges to the development of the region. Netflix is branding itself as a global platform with more than 1 million subscribers in the ASEAN region alone and it is important to check whether Southeast Asian contents are well-represented by analyzing its state through each of the ASEAN Member States' Netflix catalog.

Similar studies have been conducted by various scholars to uncover the hidden power imbalances emanating from the cataloging of the audiovisual content in Netflix. Several scholars have employed catalog analysis to study the characteristics of local Netflix catalogs within a specific territory. Lobato (2018) patterned his method from the ones used by Nordenstreng & Varis (1974) — gathering of data by checking the programming of television channels in 50 countries — to explore the nature and characteristics of Netflix Australia's catalog and to measure the ratio between domestic titles versus foreign ones. However, instead of analyzing the “programming” or scheduling of contents, Lobato & Scarlata (2017) analyzed the “catalog” because Netflix doesn't have a fixed screening “program.” Through catalog analysis, his study revealed that the Australian Netflix catalog only features 2.0% - 2.5% Australian content. And, upon checking the catalog of US Netflix, there is more Australian content available than in the local Netflix Australia catalog. Additionally, the Australian films available in the Australian Netflix catalog seem to be lower-value, lesser-known content (Lobato, 2017). At the time of writing, there was only one well known title in the catalog Mad Max: Fury Road.” Further, Lobato & Scarlata (2017) argued that “Netflix is increasingly important for the international distribution of Australian content and is unquestionably a central player in Australia's audiovisual future.”

Similarly, Kim (2021) studied Netflix's rise in Canada and argued that the emergence of Netflix's SVOD service in the country “caused upheaval in Canada's media industries.” US' cultural invasion has been a longstanding issue within the territory, however, Canadian companies find opportunities for local content to penetrate the global market through the platform. The study found that there were only 29 Canadian television series and 73 films available on Netflix's global catalogs. Locally, Canadian content is in a "marginalized position" especially when considering how Netflix Canada's catalog has 6,100 titles and there are only 29 Canadian films and 15 Canadian television series available (Kim, 2021). This imbalance in representation has been underscored by the Canadian Broadcasting Commission since the country views television as the main medium for developing the nation's cultural identity through production of Canadian content: "the penetration of US SVOD services into Canadian households and the following decline of viewers of Canadian television is a matter of importance in the nation's entire mediascape" (CBC, 2017 as cited in Kim, 2021).

In Europe, the European Audiovisual Observatory found that across Netflix's 28 European catalogs, "EU-originated movies make up between 12 percent and 21 percent of the catalog (depending on the market)" (Lobato, 2018). The proportion of local movies range from 0 percent to 10 percent with no local films available in most EU28 countries including Austria, Bulgaria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Finland, Greece, Croatia, Hungary, Lithuania, Latvia, Malta, Romania, Slovenia, and the Slovak Republic. An important finding in the study suggests that "Hollywood movies typically account for over two-thirds of the titles on offer in Netflix's European catalogs" (Lobato, 2018). While British, German, and French content have presence in the platform, American content amounts to two-thirds of the catalog. In response to the findings that Hollywood content are dominating the SVOD services, especially on Netflix, policymakers revised the 2016 European Audiovisual Media Services Directive and proposed a "20 percent minimum European content quota on all streaming services—including U.S.-based services like Netflix and Amazon" (Lobato, 2019). Such measures open possibilities for research on media flows to have an impact and affect policy making.

Following a similar approach done by Lobato (2019), a quantitative catalog analysis of the ASEAN Netflix catalogs is a plausible starting ground to understand the state of ASEAN mediascape in the age of Netflix. Getting a clear grasp of the intraregional mobility of locally-produced ASEAN content is also crucial to bridge the literature gap concerning ASEAN media studies. Additionally, an analysis of which content enter the list of Netflix' Top 10 films and TV shows could provide a glimpse of how locally-produced ASEAN content fare in the Southeast Asian region.

Chapter 3

METHODOLOGY

This chapter expounds on the methodology used in this research. Following the method conducted by Lobato & Scarlata (2017) to assess the state of Australian content in Netflix: First is to manually inspect and code titles in each of the ASEAN Member States' Netflix catalogs based on the keywords of their "country of origin" or "nationality." The platforms' respective categorization systems will reveal all titles related to the keyword accordingly. Second is to "cross-check for discrepancies between content metadata and categories" using third party indexing sites. Lobato & Scarlata (2017) warned that some titles not properly labeled by Netflix might not appear on the search engine based on the keywords of their country of origin, however, they argue that their method is "sufficient to provide an approximate indication of the amount of easily discoverable local content." Scholars conducting catalog analysis of Netflix catalog must understand that catalogs are not fixed and are constantly changing, being updated, and evolving. Thus, such a method can only provide a "static snapshot of a single point in time" (Lobato & Scarlata, 2017).

Additionally, to check how locally-produced ASEAN contents fare in the region, I have obtained the comprehensive list of Netflix's Top 10 list of films and TV shows from July 4, 2021, to May 1, 2022. The list recorded which film and TV show titles were mostly viewed in each territory for 43 weeks. To analyze the data, I have filtered the list to show only the ASEAN territories. In doing so, the list showed which titles, foreign or local, entered the top 10 list and how long did these titles stayed in the list. This method allowed me to see whether locally-produced ASEAN titles enter the Netflix top 10 list or not, providing a glimpse of which titles, and their country of origins, are mostly viewed Southeast Asian Netflix subscribers.

3.1. Data Collection and Analysis

This section will explain the data collection and analysis process that I have undertaken to pursue this study. To better assess the state of Southeast Asian content on Netflix, I employed catalog analysis by manually inspecting, sifting, and coding the titles related to the following search terms: Brunei Darussalam, Brunei, Cambodia, Cambodian, Indonesia, Indonesian, Laos, Lao, Malaysia, Malaysian, Malay, Myanmar, Burmese, Philippines, Filipino, Tagalog, Singapore, Singaporean, Thailand, Thai, Vietnam, and Vietnamese. The platform maintains a categorization system that automatically shows the list of films and TV shows related to the keywords once typed into the search box. This method of analysis has been used by several scholars such as Lobato & Scarlata (2017) to measure the amount of Australian content in Netflix Australia's catalog, and Kim (2021) to examine how Netflix Canada delivers Canadian content.

It is important to note that Netflix does not release official statistics about its content library and audience consumption. Thus, researchers of SVOD platforms such as Netflix are left to either manually code each title or consult third-party indexing sites such as UNOGS.com, JustWatch, Flixwatch, and Flixpatrol, to get additional data on the total number of titles available per country, the number of locally produced titles available on the platform, and the regions where these titles are mostly available.

Additionally, I used a Virtual Private Network (VPN) to bypass the geo-blocking of Netflix in other countries. Being geographically located in the Philippines, my Internet Protocol (IP) address automatically positions me in this part of the region and blocks any attempts to access other countries' Netflix catalogs. Using VPN allowed me to change my virtual location to other Southeast Asian countries and gave me the ability to examine their catalogs. This method, as described by Lobato & Scarlata (2017), allows researchers to see which contents are available per region, and to cross-check whether the number of titles available locally is similar across Netflix platforms.

In using the catalogs to analyze the state and characteristics of Southeast Asian media content on Netflix, Lobato (2018) warned that the “catalog is not the audience,” thus, scholars must be aware that catalogs won't be able to present us anything about audience activity. Further, he expressed that “a catalog is not a reliable indicator of taste, consumption, or demand within a given nation. Catalog analysis as a method can only help us understand patterns of distribution, not reception.” Knowing how crucial it is to understand how Southeast Asians consume Netflix within the region, I am fortunate to have retrieved open-access data of the Netflix Top 10 list from Netflix's Top 10 website where they publish four global Top 10 lists for films and TV shows: Film (English), TV (English), Film (Non-English), and TV (Non-English). The comprehensive data, which the independent accounting firm, EY, reviewed, covered all of the weekly lists and weeks in the Top 10 on the site starting from July 4, 2021, to May 1, 2022. Analyzing the Top 10 list allowed me to get a better picture of what titles are Southeast Asian Netflix subscribers favorably watching, and from which countries these titles are originating. Looking closely at the Top 10 list is a crucial part of this study as it provided objective data on the viewing consumption of subscribers in the ASEAN region.

3.2. Data Collection: Process

Netflix and other SVOD catalogs are constantly changing. Lobato (2018) further noted that these catalogs consisted of a “finite number of “viewables”, or units of content,” which were acquired through licensing from various networks and producers. With this in mind, the date and time of data collection are very important as the analysis will only show a snapshot of the catalog at a particular time frame. Overall, this research was able to sift through the Netflix catalogs of Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, Philippines, and Vietnam. The full list of 1047 Southeast Asian titles coded can be found in the appendix section (see Appendix A), as well as the data on the Top 10 most-watched films and TV shows in the Netflix catalog of the 6 ASEAN countries from July 4, 2021, to May 1, 2022 (see Appendix B). No titles related to Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar appeared during the data gathering process in all ASEAN Netflix catalogs.

STEP 1: Encoding of Southeast Asian titles. From April 14 to April 15, 2022, I was able to log 618 Southeast Asian titles matching the listed keywords above using Netflix Philippines’s search engine. The encoding was done through google forms with the following data fields: Country, Title, Year, Type, and Distribution.

1. Country data field refers to the country of origin of the title, nationality, or its country of production;
2. Title refers to the actual title of the content;
3. Year logs the year of production of the content;
4. Type categorizes the content to either film or TV show; and
5. Distribution field records all territories within the ASEAN region which the title or content is available or accessible through Netflix.

After logging all searchable ASEAN titles, I then went to check Unogs.com to see the total amount of titles available on Netflix Philippines, of which the website counted 5899 titles overall. From May 2 to 7, 2022, I used a VPN to bypass the geo-blocking of Netflix to access the catalogs of other ASEAN neighbors. I was able to sift through Netflix Thailand, Netflix Indonesia, Netflix Malaysia, Netflix Singapore, and Netflix Vietnam which provided this study with an additional 428 Southeast Asian titles, some only accessible in certain territories. Unogs.com logs a total of 6315 titles on Netflix Thailand, 6055 on Netflix Malaysia, 6022 on Netflix Indonesia, 6414 on Netflix Singapore, and 5841 on Netflix Vietnam.

STEP 2: Identifying the country origin of the Top 10 list. The data from Netflix that listed the Top 10 films and TV dramas per country per week doesn't include the country origin of the titles. Understanding the content's "nationality" is crucial as it will identify which countries produce contents that are being watched and favored by Southeast Asians to the point of entering the Top 10 list. Country origin might be best understood as synonymous with the "nationality" of the content. From the list, I filtered the ASEAN Member States first and manually encoded the country origin of each title that entered the Top 10 list from the week of July 4, 2021, until May 1, 2022. Identifying the frequency of the titles in the Top 10 list is crucial in this study as it will create a starting ground for identifying the audience's viewing preferences. The Netflix Top 10 data included 6 ASEAN countries: Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, and Vietnam. No official data is available on Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar.

3.3. Data Collection: Limitations

There were several limitations that I encountered as I embarked on data collection. As a researcher, I acknowledge these limitations and I understand that my study does not aim to be exhaustive, but rather seeks to take initial steps to explore a wide perspective concerning Southeast Asian media flows research. These are the limitations I have found throughout the conduct of my data collection:

Netflix geo-blocking: Being geographically situated in the Philippines, I am only able to access the catalog of Netflix Philippines. It is important to understand that Netflix catalogs vary per country. Thus, it is almost impossible for me to access the catalogs of other Southeast Asian countries. To circumvent this limitation, SVOD researchers are pressed to choose three options: The first is to fly to the nine remaining Southeast Asian countries and check their Netflix catalogs upon landing within their territories. Being physically abroad will automatically change my IP address to the specific location that I am in. While this option is possible, it is impractical to do so at this time when the threat of the COVID-19 virus is still looming within the region.

The second option is to scrape the internet to gather data about each ASEAN country's catalogs. This option entails the researcher to rely on third-party indexing sites such as Unogs.com, FlixPatrol, FlixWatch, and JustWatch for possible lists of titles available in each territory. However, as I have observed, no website offers an option to automatically filter the Southeast Asian titles from Netflix catalogs. While some websites provide data on all available titles per country, it will still take researchers time to sort all titles and encode them manually. It might also be questionable if the research data is just collected from third-party indexing sites because most are not comprehensive enough and sometimes, it takes weeks before the actual Netflix updates are reflected on these third-party indexing websites.

The last option is to use a VPN to bypass the geo-blocking of Netflix within various territories. This is what I have employed in my research to access the catalogs of other Southeast Asian countries. While this is very effective as the VPN allowed me to change my location virtually without physically going abroad, I find it difficult to look for the right VPN servers which would help me evade the strict geo-blocking policy of Netflix. After downloading several VPN apps and trying their services to particularly change my location to a specific Southeast Asian country, only the OpenVPN application worked.

OpenVPN with its Southeast Asian servers allowed me to be virtually transported to 3 Southeast Asian countries — Indonesia, Thailand, and Vietnam, and thus, enabling me to access their catalogs. Unfortunately, aside from these three countries, there aren't other Southeast Asian servers available, thus limiting my data collection to be exhaustive of ASEAN territories. To gather titles from Netflix Malaysia and Singapore, I followed the second option and went to FlixWatch to encode Southeast Asian titles listed on their Netflix country catalog.

Lack of Netflix data on four Southeast Asian countries: As established in this study, Netflix does not release any statistical data about the details of its library content. Based on Netflix Help Center, the streaming platform is available in 190 countries except for China, Crimea, North Korea, Russia, and Syria (Netflix, 2016). This means that Netflix is available in all Southeast Asian countries, however, no data can be found about Netflix in Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar. Even the Top 10 list from Netflix does not include any data about them. I have tried typing keywords related to the four countries on Netflix's search engine but no films or TV shows associated or linked to them were shown. With almost no data gathered from these four countries, this research cannot fully claim an exhaustive study of the state of Southeast Asian media on Netflix. Nonetheless, having six countries is already impressive data in terms of checking the state of how the ASEAN media fares in the contemporary digital streaming SVOD market, and whether intraregional flows of ASEAN media are present. The six countries with Netflix data gathered are all member states with advanced media production infrastructures.

Limited Keywords: Relying solely on the metadata from Netflix and its categorization system, I may have missed some Southeast Asian titles not properly tagged by Netflix based on their country of origin. This is possible as while I was sifting through each Netflix catalog, some titles did not show up when I use the keywords I have previously listed. To gather as many Southeast Asian titles as possible, I have extended additional effort in checking related videos to see whether there are remaining titles that should be included in my research. Cross-checking untagged Netflix titles on google search to see their country of origin has been an additional task to proceed with a credible study.

FINDINGS AND ANALYSIS

This chapter will focus on the findings and analysis based on the data gathered by the researcher. There are three main points that this research would like to zoom at: first is the historical analysis of ASEAN audiovisual industries to get a panoramic view of the region's development of media content; second, the total number of ASEAN content available in the Netflix catalogs of each ASEAN Member States; and third, the number of ASEAN titles which entered the Top 10 lists from weeks of June 28, 2021, until May 1, 2022.

4.1. ASEAN Audiovisual Industry

It is worth looking at how the ASEAN fares in producing audiovisual content such as films and TV shows. The new technology of cinema arrived in Southeast Asia during the age of colonialism where Western powers dominated the political, economic, and social aspects of the region. Currently, factors such as economic differences, political instability, and colonial mentality hinder the growth of the region's media industries. Collectively, the history of audiovisual industries in the ASEAN is directly related to the history of the people in their struggle against the commercial system and influential external forces brought by colonialism, such as Hollywood cinema, especially in their quest to develop each country's national cinema.

There is merit in looking at how audiovisual industries developed in the region to have a better grasp of the contemporary ASEAN audiovisual media content situations in leading digital platforms like Netflix. De la Rosa (2015) studied the developments of the film industry in the ASEAN and argued that half of the ten member states needed major assistance specifically for “systems development, infrastructure, upgrade, capability build-up, and international co-production”. In the study, the term “film” was used to encompass various audiovisual content produced in the region, and additionally, underscored the role of cinema as a powerful tool that could unlock the realization of an ASEAN Identity.

1. Brunei Darussalam is “barely getting-off” from the ground with just one international film produced in the past year (De la Rosa, 2015). Brunei’s first feature film Gema Dari Menara (Voices from the Minaret) was released in 1968 (Sunny, 2000). There was little to no filmmaking until Radio Television Brunei (RTB) launched its television service in 1975, but with rather minimal production. Brunei’s second film Ada Apa Dengan Rina (What’s with Rina?) was just released in 2013, being notable as the first feature film with the use of Brunei Malay dialect. Their third feature, Yasmine (2014) was a co-production between Brunei, Malaysia, Indonesia, and Hong Kong. To date, a new wave of young Brunein filmmakers are leading the course of contemporary Brunei cinema.
2. Cambodia’s motion picture industry dates back to the 1920s with documentary films, with King Norodom Sihanouk as a certified cinephile even before him being chosen as king (De la Rosa, 2015). The golden years of Cambodian cinema were marked in the 1960s by the classic films Lea Haey Duong Dara (Goodbye Duong Dara) and Pos Keng Kang (The Snake King's Wife) by Tea Lim Kun. During the Khmer Rouge in the 1970s, the moving images industry saw a decline with the closing of cinemas and the lack of locally-made films. The country's industry rebounded in the 1990s after a "period of hiatus" (De la Rosa, 2015) with hundreds of Cambodian films released from 1990-1994. Currently, Cambodia prides itself on notable filmmakers such as Rithy Pahn, the director of the docudrama "Rice People" (1994), a film in competition to the 1994 Cannes Film Festival and was the country's submission to the 67th Academy Awards for Best Foreign Language Film. Several other contemporary filmmakers emerged from Cambodia while slowly rebuilding its film infrastructure. In 2009, the Cambodian Film Commission was created which is a positive step toward the further development of the country's local audiovisual industry.

3. Indonesia also has a long history in terms of moving images as film arrived in the country in the 1900, not long after its invention in the West (Suwardi, 2000). The first-ever film made in Indonesia was a documentary film in 1911, while its first feature film entitled Loetang Kasaroeng (Legend of Loetang Kasaroeng) was produced in 1926 by the Europeans. During the Japanese occupation in the 1930s, local moving pictures were banned to prioritize Japanese educational movies and newsreels produced mainly by Japan. It was only after the Japanese occupation in the 1950s that foreign film imports were banned to prioritize locally-made films following Sukarno's nationalistic and anti-imperialistic posture. The 1980s marked the peak of the country's movie industry, followed by the resumption of foreign motion picture imports in the 1990s (De la Rosa, 2015). The Reformasi in the 2000s gave birth to new thinking in the country's local cinematic narratives addressing the previously banned topics of religion, race, and love. Notable Indonesian film Ada Apa

Dengan Cinta? (What's with Love?) in 2002 soared to popularity during this time. Currently, Indonesia is making a name in the global audiovisual industry with their cinema's presence in various international film festivals.

4. Laos cinema is quite young compared to its Southeast Asian neighbors with the release of its oldest known film Go to Gather in the Zone of Two Provinces in 1956. Campos (2019) notes that it is difficult to speak of Lao film history as the country was divided after the Second World War while the other neighboring states have already started to grasp the concept of “national cinemas.” Considered as the first Lao narrative features, The Untrue (1970) and True Friend and Our Land (1973) were propaganda films made by the army at the height of the Vietnam war. Film production was eventually controlled by the government after the country's reunification to Lao People's Democratic Republic (PDR) in 1975. The coming of the digital technology in the 2000s paved the way for the emergence of new waves of independent filmmaking such as Lao filmmaker Mattie Do, who is leading the contemporary film industry of Laos. Additionally, the creation of local film festivals such as the Vientienne International Film Festival, and the Luang Prabang Film Festival helped advance the motion picture industry of the nation. In 2019, there were only twenty-five Lao-produced narrative features to date (Campos, 2019).

5. Malaysia. Ahmad (2000) argues that any discussion on Malay film industry “must always start with Singapore.” Historically, Singapore was part of Malaya and the Federation of Malaysia until 1965 when the island separated from its mainland body, establishing its own nation-state. Malaysian cinema started in 1927 with the film Xin Ke (The Immigrant) by Guo Waochen (Muthalib, 2015). From 1930s to 1960s, the Malay film industry produced black-and-white films mostly based on Malay folklore and legends, and mostly owned by Shaw Brothers and Cathay Keris of Singapore. In the 60s, notable Malaysian filmmakers emerged in the scene like P. Ramlee, Roomai Noor, Hussein Haniff, Jamil Sulong, and M. Amin (Ahmad, 2000). Malay filmmakers then migrated to Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia as freelancers at Merdeka Film Studios or at Filem Negara Malaysia, the government film studios set up by the British in 1946, on the latter half of the 60s when the Singapore studios closed down (Ahmad, 2000; Muthalib, 2015). The nationalistic sentiments of Malays became a catalyst for the Malay political leaders to support the local film industry resulting to the creation of the National Film Development Corporation Malaysia (FINAS) in 1981, which gave an industry structure to Malaysian cinema. From 1995 to 2015, during the time of Prime Minister Dr. Mahathir Mohamad, Malaysia's animation industry flourished with more than 200 animation television series and 11 animation features produced (Muthalib, 2015). Currently, contemporary and independent new wave of filmmakers are changing the landscape of Malaysian cinema.

6. Myanmar. The first screenings in Burma were presumed to be between 1901-1907 when Indian showman Abdulally Esoofally “traveled to Southeast Asian region with his bioscope one-reel film shows” (Barnouw, 1993 as cited in Grøn, 2016). In the 1920s the first Burmese documentary, a recording of the funeral procession of a highly respected Burmese independence advocate, U

Tun Shein, was shown in Rangoon. Subsequently, the first feature fiction film entitled “Love and Liquor” directed by U Ohm Maung, regarded as the father of Burmese cinema was screened in October that year, which marked the beginnings of the motion picture in the country (Aung and Swe, 2006 as cited in Grøn, 2016). The film industry grew in the country during this period numbering around 640 productions within the first two decades of filmmaking (Grøn, 2016). Anti-colonists sentiments grew in the 1930s and activism has been reflected in cinema prompting the British colonial authorities to impose censorship and restrictions. “Filmmaking became a key tool in the struggle for national independence of the Burmese in the 1930s” (Grøn, 2016). In 1962, the Revolutionary Council led by General Ne Win replaced the civilian government with a military regime through a coup, bringing the slogan “The Burmese Way to Socialism,” inspired by the rising communism in Asia and Europe. “The ideological shift and the initiation of far-reaching political and economic reforms would affect all areas of society” (Grøn, 2016). The military controlled film productions and ordered the industry to stop producing and importing content that would jeopardize the moral fiber of the population. “Controlling the locally-based film industries has throughout the history of cinema been seen as a highly effective way for authoritarian regimes to influence, if not control, the minds of its subjects” (Grøn, 2016). In 1964, the government banned 97 of the 171 scripts submitted for approval. Additionally, both the Board of Film Censors and the Motion Picture Organization were transformed by the military regime as a panopticon to monitor the activities of filmmakers. These changes affected the development of Burmese cinema as seen in a decrease of productions by fifty percent from 86 releases in 1986 to 40 releases in 1987 (Grøn, 2016). The rampant corruption and day-to-day malpractice resulted in Myanmar being one of the poorest countries by the 1980s resulting in the 1988 student uprising, which saw the decline of the Ne Win leadership and the emergence of a new military junta with the new State Law and Order Restoration Council (SLORC). The SLORC placed the country under martial law from 1988 to 1992, which paved the way for the military to neutralize the rising democratic movements. “By the early 2000s, decades of institutional and organizational control leading to creative constraints and isolation from the practices and trends in the international world of filmmaking had brought the Burmese film industry to a historical low in terms of both output and artistic development” (Grøn, 2016). Although these historical backgrounds affected the development of Burmese cinema, to date, a new wave of filmmakers equipped with digital technologies are pushing the cinema of Myanmar to international fora such as Maw Naing’s “The Monk” (2014) at the Karlovy Vary International Film Festival; and Wera Aung’s “The Robe” (2016) at the 21st Busan International Film Festival.

7. The Philippines also has a well-documented history of the emergence of cinema. “On December 17, 1896, Francisco Petierra, an operator of a phonograph salon on Escolta street in Manila, announced the coming of the moving picture in the newspaper El Comercio” (Del Mundo, 2000). In 1919, the first Filipino-produced-and-directed film entitled Dalagang Bukid (Country Maiden) was made by Jose Nepomuceno. However, the production of motion pictures during this era was very little as reported in the 1930 Film Daily Yearbook report, stating that “the domestic production of motion pictures is an unimportant factor in the Philippine Islands” (Del Mundo, 2000). While cinema gained momentum with the advent of sound technology, productions were halted in the 1940s due to the Pacific War. The presence of Hollywood films in the theaters during this period was a force not to be ignored, however, Philippine cinema was able to develop itself by adapting the traditions of sarswela, komedya, and moro-moro in their narratives (Del Mundo, 2000). During the Japanese occupation from 1942-1944, filmmaking was suspended except for at least two projects authorized by the Japanese Propaganda Unit - Dawn of the Freedom and Tatlong Maria (Three Marys). After the battle of Manila which left the city in shambles, filmmaking was immediately revived in 1946 to signal the sign of normalcy and rehabilitation. The decades that followed from the mid-1940s to the 1960s could be characterized as the studio years of Philippine cinema with the three big studios patterning their systems to Hollywood standards - Sampaguita, LVN, and Premiere (Del Mundo, 2000). The 1950s gave rise to notable Filipino filmmakers such as Lamberto Avellana, Manuel Conde, Gregorio Fernandez, and Manuel Silos. Also during the postwar years, Visayan filmmakers from Southern Philippines crafted their films using their own languages, however, regional filmmaking was not sustained until the 1970s with fewer films from the regions being produced. The dominance of Manila-based movies underscored the fact that “Filipino filmmaking during this era is mainly based in Manila and Philippine films are basically in Tagalog” (Del Mundo, 2000). The 1960s saw the demise of the studio system, the rise of independent companies, and the significant increase of Filipino movie audiences primarily due to the establishment of the Manila Film Festival where theaters in Manila were opened for ten days in June for ten choice Filipino movies (Del Mundo, 2000). The audiences also patronized more locally-made popular commercial films which copied the popular foreign movies of the time (Lumbera, 1992 as cited by Del Mundo, 2000). The 1970s were dominated by bomba or sex films and softcore pornos with the number of films released reaching 225 movies, and a “cursory look at the titles of these bomba movies would give one an idea of how low the industry had gone” (Del Mundo, 2000). However, film production saw a decline in 1972 during the height of Martial Law. Former President Ferdinand E. Marcos assumed dictatorial powers controlling several aspects of Philippine society with the help of the military resulting in the worsening economic conditions and political instability of the country in the 1980s which greatly affected the movie industry. Alternative filmmaking took stronger strides with the emergence of digital technology in the 2000s. New methods of filmmaking with smaller and affordable cameras allowed more Filipinos to venture into content production. This development also allowed regional filmmakers to have better representation in the national discourse of Philippine cinema.

8. Singapore shares the beginnings of its motion picture industry with Malaysia as both countries initially are part of the bigger Malaya. The first film made in Singapore was a Malay-language one entitled Laila Majnun in 1933 directed by Indian national B.S. Rajhans (Tan, 2000). Films were used as propaganda by the Japanese during their occupation resulting in the decline of the industry for eight years. Two big studios emerged after the war, Shaw Brothers and Cathay Keris Film Productions, which both revived the film industry of the country. In particular, Shaw employed filmmakers from India and the Philippines to produce content, which by then already had strong film industries. Subsequently, in 1955, Shaw hired the famous comedian P. Ramlee, the first Malay director, to make a film. By 1963, the industry became stagnant “due to the advent of television and the political and racial riots in Singapore” (Tan, 2000). And despite having a flourishing Chinese and Malay film industry in the 1950s and 1960s, “Singapore's film industry declined after independence in 1965” (De la Rosa, 2015). Shaw Brothers and Cathay ventured into producing Chinese-language films as they realized Malay-language films are limiting and cannot sustain the industry. With Chinese-language films, they were able to penetrate Hong Kong, however, these good days were also short-lived. There were no studio-initiated activities in Singapore by the 1970s, but several independent producers kept the industry alive. By 1990, the Economic Development Board (EDB) saw that developing Singapore as a film hub for the Southeast Asian region could mean good business, and thus started various schemes to attract foreign companies to start up production facilities in the country (Tan, 2000). “The 1990s saw the production of pioneering films in Singapore with phenomenal success such as Money No Enough in 1998, which eventually ignited the nation's drive towards moviemaking” (De la Rosa, 2015). After several scandals surrounding the EDB including the failure of some funded projects at the box office, Singapore shifted to developing the country as a regional satellite television hub, attracting companies like MTV and The Disney Channel. Singapore is also the home of one of the best film festivals in Asia, the Singapore International Film Festival (SIFF). SIFF was born out of founder Geoffrey Malone’s rhetorical question: “Could a film festival exist in Singapore, a country with no existing film industry of its own?” (Tan, 2000). SIFF opened new perspectives in filmmaking and allowed the Singaporeans to desire for less-mainstream media content. To date, Singapore prides itself with the new wave of filmmakers like Anthony Chen, director of the award-winning film Ilo Ilo, which premiered at the 2013 Cannes Film Festival.

9. Thailand’s first encounter with cinema dates back to 1897, “when a Frenchman brought the apparatus called the Parisian cinematograph to Thai theaters” (Ngamsnit, 2000). Having access to film equipment, the royal family were the first filmmakers of Thailand with Prince Krom Luang Sappasatrsupakit producing content about royal activities. In 1922, the Royal State Railways Authority established the official Informational Film Department which was tasked to produce media content that would promote traveling by train. The State Railway Authority then became the training school for early filmmaking. From 1927 to 1936 under the reign of King Rama 7, the Krungtep Ppapayon Borisat film-production company was established and was able to produce the first Thai commercial feature film made by Thai filmmakers entitled Choke Song Chan (Doubly Lucky). During this period, a lot of Thai film production companies were established and the production of film content for the public was abundant. The first large modern film studio in Thailand was also built in the Bang Kapi district (Ngamsnit, 2000). Around the mid-1960s, love story musicals became a hit and boosted Thailand’s film industry. By the 1970s, there was an explosion of locally produced films “when the Thai government imposed heavy taxes on imported films” leading to a boycott by Hollywood studios (De la Rosa, 2015). The 1980s saw the flourishing of Thai film industries wherein film production amounted to about 300 films each year. However, the film industry saw stiff competition with foreign, mostly American content, as distributors such as Columbia, MGM, Twentieth-Century Fox, Paramount, Warner Brothers, and Disney set up offices in Thailand (Ngamsnit, 2000). During the latter part of the 1990s, economic constraints and high taxes mainly led to the decline of film productions in Thailand with only 50 films produced by 1996, and 24 films only in 1997. The 2000s ushered in a new wave of filmmaking with the emergence of Thai visionaries such as Apitchapong Weerasethakul, Nonzee Nimibutr, Pen-Ek Ratanaruang. Currently, the Thai audiovisual industry is also flourishing with the development of a new genre the BL or “Boys Love.”

10. Vietnam’s cinematic history began in the 1920s when the Huong Ky Film Company was created in Hanoi and produced silent features and documentaries on the funeral of Emperor Khải Định and the enthronement of his successor Bảo Đại (De la Rosa, 2015). However, Tinh (2000) argues that when talking about national cinema, “Vietnamese cinema was born in 1953 during the war of resistance against French colonialists.” When cinema was brought to Vietnam by French colonialists, the medium was used only to serve the interests of the colonial powers. By 1945, the August Revolution challenged the ruling French colonialism and installed the Democratic Republic of Vietnam. During this period, the Cine and Photo Bureau under the Ministry of Information and Propaganda was established and began creating newsreels and documentaries. The first newsreel of Vietnamese cinema was President Ho Chi Minh's declaration of independence shot by a Frenchman who gave the footage to the Government of Vietnam as a present. The struggle for independence lasted for nine years until 1954 when the Vietnamese revolutionary cinema emerged allowing the filmmakers to be at the frontlines documenting the war staged by France, fighting side by side with soldiers. Vietnam's first feature film entitled On the Same River was made in 1959 and marked a step forward in the growth of Vietnam's national cinema. The liberation of South Vietnam in April 1975 allowed the country to become fully independent with its cinema entering a new stage of development. From 1977 to 1984, 15 to 20 films were produced every year (Tinh, 2000). While the majority of Vietnamese cinema during this period focused on documentaries during the war, by 1975, feature films started taking the spotlight. In 1986, Vietnam carried out the renovation policy or Doi Moi, spearheading great changes in the social, economic, and cultural fields. Upon entering the market economy in this period, Vietnam abolished the centralized subsidy system in the film industry resulting in the emergence of new film production companies from only 6 state-run film production companies before 1989, to 25 more companies managed by various associations and institutions around the country spurring competitions and advancing the industry even further. However, this shift to a market economy in 1986 "dealt a blow to Vietnamese film-making, which struggled to compete with video and TV, and sharply reduced the number of films produced the next year" (De la Rosa, 2015). Some of the well-known Vietnamese language films include Cyclo, The Scent of Green Papaya, and Vertical Ray of the Sun by French-trained director Tran Anh Hung (De la Rosa, 2015).

The audiovisual history of the ASEAN region is closely related to and affected by the decades-long Western colonialism in the region. Factors such as economic and political instability greatly hindered the production and sustainability of each ASEAN member state's audiovisual media industry.

4.2. ASEAN in Netflix

Knowing the percentage of Southeast Asian titles available in all Netflix catalogs within the region is crucial in the development of this research. The table below shows the number of ASEAN titles available per country of origin and Netflix catalog, the number of titles available only within its country of origin, the number of local titles available within ASEAN, and the total number of titles on Netflix including the titles not from the region.

Table 1. Summary of ASEAN titles available in the catalogs of AMS.

Country of origin	No. of ASEAN titles available per AMS	No. of local titles available only within its country of origin	No. of local titles available within ASEAN	Total No. of Titles on Netflix
Brunei Darussalam	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Cambodia	N/A (1%)	N/A	1	N/A
Indonesia	655 (10.88%)	135	155	6022
Laos	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Malaysia	181 (2.99%)	N/A	85	6055
Myanmar	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Philippines	619 (10.49%)	119	106	5899
Singapore	133 (2.07%)	N/A	112	6414
Thailand	611 (9.67%)	136	88	6315
Vietnam	559 (9.57%)	95	15	5841

Based on the table above, no data is available on four ASEAN countries namely Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar. This is due to the lack of information about their catalogs available on Netflix and third-part indexing sites. It is also noteworthy to mention that only one title appeared upon input of the keyword “Cambodia,” the film Fist They Killed My Father (2017).

4.2.1. Netflix Cambodia

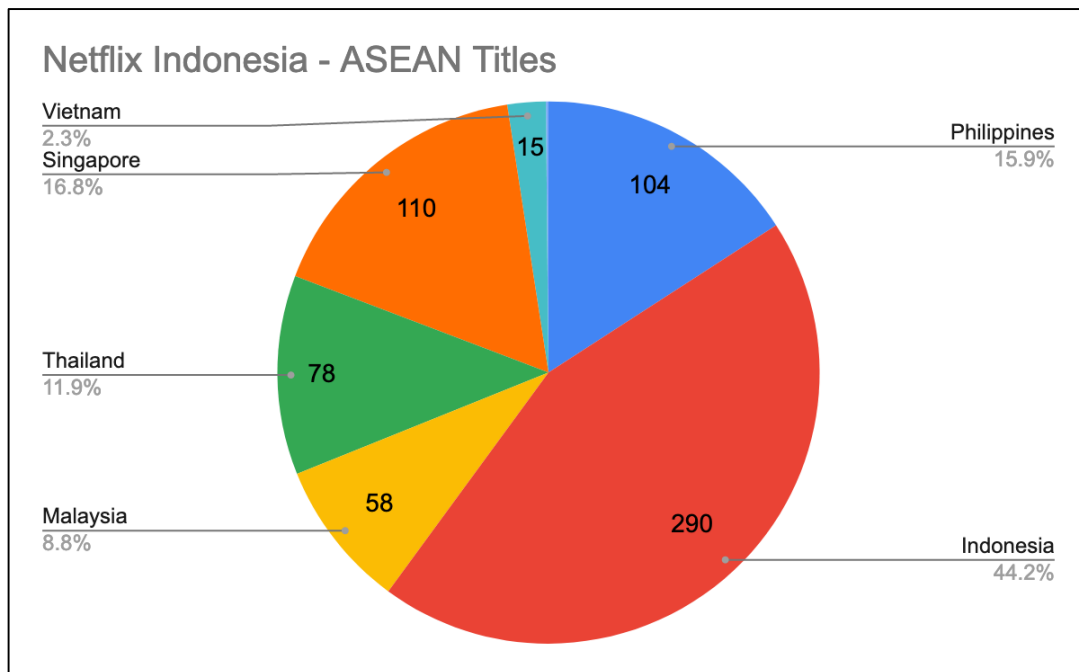

There was difficulty accessing Netflix Cambodia because of the absence of an available VPN server. The only opportunity to check Cambodian content is to check if there are any titles available on other ASEAN Netflix catalogs. By following the data gathering process, only one title appeared tagged with “Cambodia” and “Cambodian” keywords: First They Killed My Father (2017). Consequently, no data can be gathered to check how many Southeast Asian titles are available on Netflix Cambodia.

4.2.2. Netflix Indonesia

I have recorded 655 Southeast Asian titles, including films and TV shows, in Netflix Indonesia’s catalog. The breakdown of the titles based on their country of origin are as follows: 290 Indonesian, 102 Filipino, 111 Singaporean, 78 Thai, 58 Malaysian, 15 Vietnamese, and 1 Cambodian.

Of the 290 Indonesian titles, only 155 were available on other AMS’ Netflix catalogs, while 135 titles were only available within Indonesian territory. Unogs.com listed a total of 6022 titles available on Netflix Indonesia which includes titles from different parts of the world. From its catalog, only 10.88% constitutes the contents from the ASEAN region.

4.2.3. Netflix Malaysia

Unlike Netflix Indonesia, I had a difficult time gathering data for Netflix Malaysia due to the unavailability of VPN servers to penetrate Malaysian territories. The data collected were mostly from the titles available in Netflix Philippines and additional titles from FlixWatch. Nonetheless, This study was able to record 181 Southeast Asian titles present in Netflix Malaysia's catalog. The following is the breakdown of titles per country of origin: 85 Malaysian, 49 Indonesian, 20 Singaporean, 13 Filipino, 9 Thai, 4 Vietnamese, and 1 Cambodian title including both TV shows and films. Only 4 of the 85 Malaysian titles are accessible across ASEAN Netflix catalogs.

Since I wasn't able to directly access Netflix Malaysia's catalog, no available data can be presented on the Malaysian titles which are only available within their territory. That said, all the recorded titles in the table are those that are accessible internationally. Data from Unogs.com shows a total of 6055 titles in Netflix Malaysia's catalog. Based on the acquired numbers, there are only 2.99% of Southeast Asian titles available on the Malaysian platform.

4.2.4. Netflix Philippines

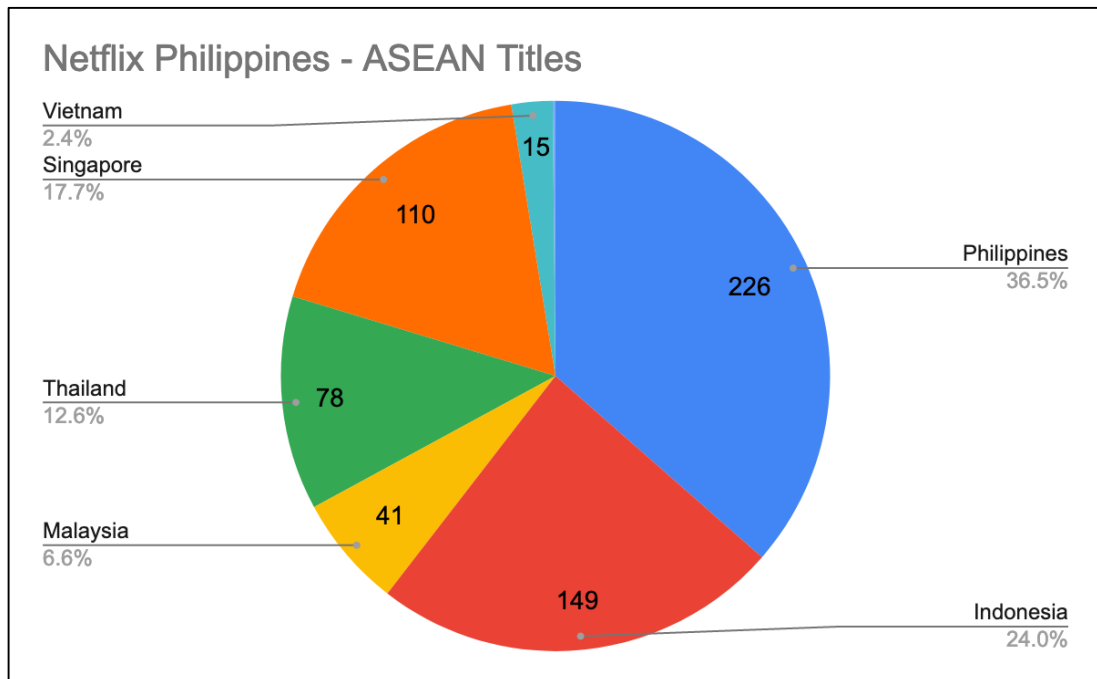

Out of all the Netflix catalogs, data from Netflix Philippines was the easiest to collect as I didn't have to use VPN servers to access the platform. With my subscription, I was able to log satisfactory data for my research. Overall, there were 619 Southeast Asian titles available on Netflix Philippines with the following breakdown: 225 Filipino, 149 Indonesian, 110 Singaporean, 78 Thai, 41 Malaysian, 15 Vietnamese, and 1 Cambodian content both TV shows and films.

Of the 225 Filipino titles, only 106 are available in other ASEAN territories. 119 Filipino content is geo-blocked only within the Philippines. Unogs.com's data reveals 5899 titles available on Netflix Philippines' platform, indicating that only 10.49% of the total are Southeast Asian content.

4.2.5. Netflix Singapore

Similar to Netflix Malaysia, acquiring data about Southeast Asian content on Netflix Singapore was a challenge. No VPN servers were able to penetrate the strict geo-blocking policy of Netflix. Still, I was able to gather data through other ASEAN Netflix catalogs. A total of 133 Southeast Asian titles were logged with the following breakdown: 45 Malaysian, 44 Indonesian, 20 Singaporean, 11 Filipino, 9 Thai, 3 Vietnamese, and 1 Cambodian content.

While all of the 112 Singaporean titles are accessible outside Singapore, only 18 titles are accessible across territories. And since I wasn't able to directly access Netflix Singapore to check about the geo-blocking of local content, no available data was indicated on the table. Unogs.com recorded 6414 titles available on the platform which tells only 2.07% are Southeast Asian titles based on the gathered numbers.

4.2.6. Netflix Thailand

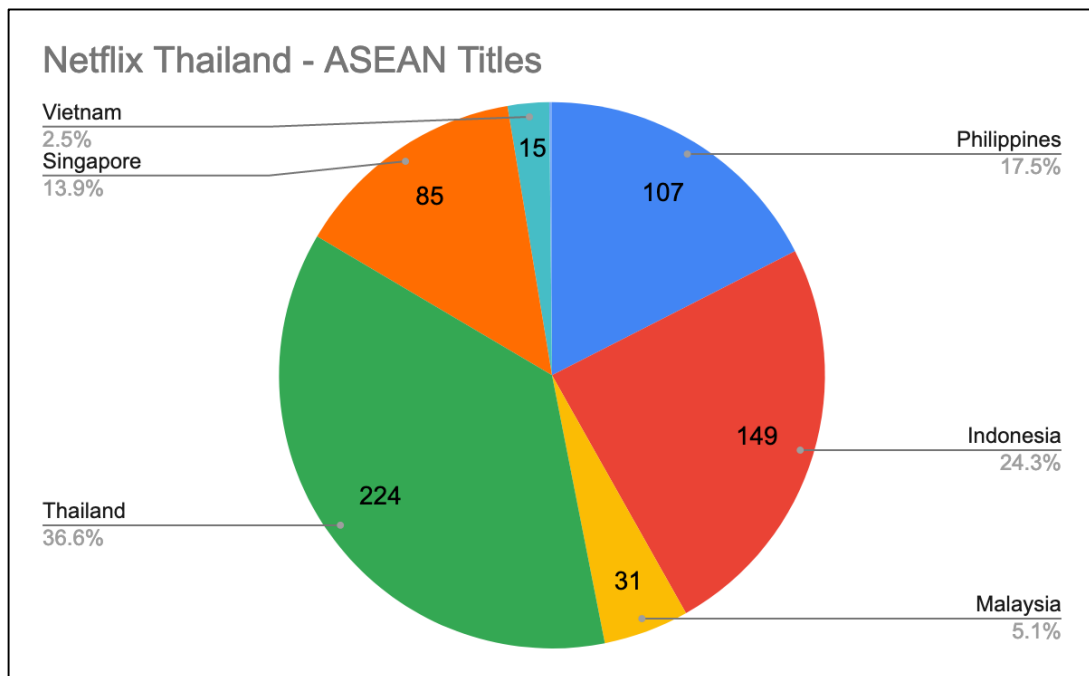

Access to Netflix Thailand was done through a VPN. Similar to Indonesia, a considerable amount of data was gathered logging a total of 611 Southeast Asian titles available in Thailand. The following are the breakdown of titles per country of origin: 224 Thai, 149 Indonesian, 106 Filipino, 85 Singaporean, 31 Malaysian, 15 Vietnamese, and 1 Cambodian title.

Of the 224 Thai contents, 88 titles are only available to the other ASEAN Member States while the remaining 136 can only be accessed within Thai territory. For example, the landmark Thai film “A Crazy Little Thing Called Love” (2010), which garnered popularity within the region, is streaming only on Netflix Thailand. Based on Unogs.com's data, there is a total of 6315 titles available in the country's catalog which indicates only 9.67% are Southeast Asian titles.

4.2.7. Netflix Vietnam

Access to Netflix Vietnam was also aided by VPN. Of the titles that appeared using the listed keywords, 559 Southeast Asian titles were logged. The breakdown of the titles per country of origin is as follows: 147 Indonesian, 110 Vietnamese, 103 Filipino, 86 Singaporean, 82 Thai, 30 Malaysian, and 1 Cambodian contents.

Of the 110 Vietnamese titles, only 15 were available in other Netflix catalogs within the region. The remaining 95 titles can only be accessed within the Vietnamese territory. Data from Unogs.com reveals a total of 5841 titles available in the Vietnamese platform, which indicates that only 9.57% are Southeast Asian titles.

4.3. Audience preference

The previous section provided a comprehensive survey of the amount of Southeast Asian titles available in each ASEAN Netflix catalog, and the total number of titles available including foreign content. However, as warned by Lobato (2018), the “catalog is not the audience... it won’t be able to present us anything about audience activity, taste, consumption, or demand within a given nation.”

Understanding what Southeast Asians watch on Netflix is crucial in this study, and through the Netflix Top 10 data, this research was able to get a closer glimpse of the region’s subscribers’ viewing activity. Netflix Top 10 is a comprehensive list released by Netflix which ranks titles based on weekly hours viewed or the total number of hours that subscribers around the world watched each title from Monday to Sunday of the previous week. The list considers each season of a series and each film on their own and also shows the total number of weeks that a season of a series or film has spent on the list. “To give you a sense of what people are watching around the world, we also publish Top 10 lists for nearly 100 countries and territories (the same locations where there are Top 10 rows on Netflix). Country lists are also ranked based on hours viewed, but don't show country-level viewing directly" (Top 10 Netflix, n.d.). To verify the list and data, independent accounting firm EY was commissioned by Netflix.

The figure above shows how many times titles of films and TV shows produced by various countries entered the weekly Top 10 list of six ASEAN countries: Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, and Vietnam. The data was based on Netflix Top 10's list covering 43 weeks from July 4, 2021, to May 5, 2022. No data was provided for the four remaining ASEAN countries: Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar.

Figure 1 shows the dominance of American and Korean-produced titles entering the weekly Top 10 list of ASEAN countries. This shows a glimpse of what content Southeast Asian Netflix subscribers prefer to spend their time watching as the Top 10 list is counted based on the number of hours a title has been watched by the platform's subscribers.

Netflix offers two types of content: films and TV shows. For films, titles from the USA dominated the list indicating that Southeast Asian viewers prefer spending time watching American-made films from the week of July 4, 2021, to May 5, 2022 (see figure 9 below). For the category of TV shows, Korean-made titles reigned (see figure 10).

Looking at the numbers, there are only 364 times Southeast Asian content entered the Top 10 list which is 6.9% of the total 5280 titles which entered the list from July 4, 2021 to May 5, 2022. South Korean content acquired 33.14% while USA-made titles recorded 39.53%. Southeast Asians spend more time watching foreign content, specifically USA titles for films and Korean titles for TV Shows, than local-regional titles. The following subsections provide country-specific analysis of their Top 10 lists. The Netflix Top 10 data in the ASEAN region can be found in the appendix (see appendix 3).

4.3.1. Netflix Indonesia

Indonesian subscribers preferred watching USA-made titles as American films frequented the Top 10 list of the platform (see figure 11 below). Of the collated data, only 54 times did Southeast Asian titles enter and/or stayed in the Top 10 list which is 12.27%, while USA titles garnered 56.14% of the weekly Top 10 for 43 weeks.

The table below lists all Southeast Asian film titles which entered Netflix Indonesia's weekly Top 10. Each title has a corresponding data on how many weeks it stayed on the list.

Table 2. List of all Southeast Asian film titles which entered Netflix Indonesia's weekly Top 10 from July 4, 2021 to May 5, 2022.

4.3.2. Netflix Malaysia

Data from Netflix Malaysia is no different as both USA and South Korean content titles reign in the weekly Top 10 lists. American-made films entered 252 times in the list which is 57.27% compared to all ASEAN titles combined which are 7.27% only (see figure 12 below). Additionally, the table in figure 9 lists all the Southeast Asian titles which entered the Top 10 list in the span of 43 weeks, with corresponding data on how many weeks each title stayed in the Top 10 ranks. It is worth mentioning that the local Malaysian animated film Upin & Ipin: The Lone Gibbon Kris was able to stay for 14 weeks on the Top 10 list compared to other titles which only lasted for a few weeks.

Similar to Netflix Indonesia, Malaysian subscribers on Netflix preferred watching South Korean TV show content. The data logged 275 times South Korean titles appeared on the Top 10 list, which is equivalent to 62.5% compared to the combined Southeast Asian titles which are just 0.23%. It is quite shocking that only 1 Southeast Asian TV show entitled “Juvana” entered the Top 10 list. The Malaysian TV show did not stand long as it only stayed for 1 week on the list.

4.3.3. Netflix Philippines

The dominance of the USA and South Korean content is apparent in all ASEAN countries. Data on Netflix Philippines shows that more USA-made films were being viewed by Filipino subscribers than other titles, garnering 63.86% frequency compared to the combined Southeast Asian titles which gathered only 8.86% (see figure 13). Listed in the following table are the Southeast Asian titles which can penetrate the Top 10 list frequently dominated by USA film titles (see table 6). It is important to note that while there are a lot of Filipino titles on the list, most of the titles only lasted for a week, with a maximum of 4 weeks as the longest.

Just like other Netflix platforms in the region, South Korean content dominated the Top 10 TV shows list in the Philippines with 43.86% frequency compared to the 21.16% of the combined ASEAN titles. It is impressive that Filipino titles achieved this relatively higher percentage which shows that aside from South Korean and USA content, Filipino subscribers are also watching locally-made content on the global SVOD platform. The following table (see figure 14 below) shows how the Southeast Asian titles fared on Netflix Philippines, with a notable presence of the local TV series “The Promise: Season 1” and “A Love to Last: Season 1,” wherein both series were able to stay on the list for 23 weeks and 18 weeks, respectively.

This is an impressive feat given that other countries' Netflix in the ASEAN region only stayed for a week or so (see table 7).

4.3.4. Netflix Singapore

Data from Netflix Singapore shows a similar trend (see figure 15 below). For films, USA-made content dominated with 60.91% frequency compared to the combined Southeast Asian titles totaling 1.82% only. The table below (see table 8) lists all the Southeast Asian titles which are able to enter the Top 10.

Singaporean subscribers also had South Korean TV show titles on their most watched list over those made from the region. With 222 times South Korean titles appearing on the list, equivalent to 50.45%, compared to the combined Southeast Asian titles of 1.36% (see figure 16). 4.3.5. Netflix Thailand

There is now an established trend in terms of which are the most watched titles by Netflix subscribers in the region, and similarly, Netflix Thailand's data showed a similar fashion. Films from the USA rose above other titles with 57.05% frequency compared to the combined Southeast Asian titles of 8.86% only (see figure 17). The table below (see table 10 below) details the titles of ASEAN films that entered Netflix Thailand's Top 10 list.

Likewise, Thai Netflix subscribers mostly spent time watching South Korean TV show content. There is a 62.05% frequency of South Korean titles compared to Southeast Asian titles with only 13.41% (see figure 18). Table 11 shows all ASEAN titles that were able to rank in Thailand's top 10 list. The titles show that Thai subscribers also patronize their content as some local titles on the list were able to stay for 8 weeks in the Top 10 list.

4.3.6. Netflix Vietnam

Lastly, Netflix Vietnam presented the same case. Films from the USA were mostly watched by Vietnamese subscribers achieving 63.18% times an American-produced title entered and stayed in the country's Top 10 list. Southeast Asian titles only got 5.68% which is telling how titles from the region were being watched by Vietnamese locals (see figure 19). Data from table 12 below shows the Southeast Asian titles that entered the Top 10 list in Vietnam. It is notable how Vietnamese titles fared quite well in the list with two titles “Camellia Sisters” and “Dreamy Eyes” both staying for 8 weeks and 5 weeks, respectively.

Further, Vietnamese subscribers spent more time watching South Korean TV shows, equivalent to 79.09%, which is a very high-frequency number compared to other Netflix data from the region (see figure 20). Southeast Asian TV shows only achieved 0.68% which is equivalent to only 1 Vietnamese TV show, “Descendants of the Sun - Vietnamese,” staying on the list for 3 weeks (see table 13).

Overall, American and Korean content are dominating the ASEAN Netflix mediascape as evidenced by the above data on the number of times titles are watched in the region. While locally made content are also being patronized, such titles cannot penetrate the Top 10 list which are dominated by two competing media flows: Hollywood and the Korean Wave.

Chapter 5

DISCUSSION AND IMPLICATIONS

5.1. The state of ASEAN audiovisual media content on Netflix

ASEAN audiovisual content is not well represented in Netflix averaging only around 10% local content present in territories including Indonesia, Philippines, Thailand, and Vietnam. Additionally, three countries Brunei Darussalam, Laos, and Myanmar, have no content at all, and Cambodian content only shows one title. Malaysia and Singapore have 2% presence outside their territory especially when searching their keywords in the Philippine Netflix catalog. Each ASEAN Member State's Netflix catalog ranges from having 5000-6000 titles, however, with such a huge catalog, Southeast Asian content are not fairly represented.

Additionally, looking at titles that entered the Netflix Top 10 list from the week of July 4, 2021 until May 1, 2022, Southeast Asians viewed mostly USA-made films, and Korean-made TV shows. Titles from the ASEAN region are being overshadowed by foreign content even though there are existing 1046 Southeast Asian titles, collectively, across the region. Currently, there is content imbalance in the ASEAN Netflix catalogs, which poses a huge concern as Southeast Asian representation in global SVOD platforms are at risk.

5.2. The factors influencing the state of ASEAN content on Netflix

There are several factors why Southeast Asian titles have less representation in each ASEAN Member State's Netflix catalog, and this research identifies two major factors in hopes to present policy recommendations to fill content inequality gaps:

1. Digital Divide

There is unequal audiovisual content production in the ASEAN region due to the differences in the stages of development particularly in the fields of IT and communication. Flor (2008) argued that there is an apparent digital divide in the ASEAN region specifically in terms of ICT development and infrastructure. While the founding members of the ASEAN, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, and Thailand, have considerably developed media infrastructures, it is evident from this research's data that the remaining countries Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar, and Vietnam, need additional support to reach a level where audiovisual production could be sustainable. This concern is crucial in the case of Brunei Darussalam and Laos, where there are very few feature film titles produced since the arrival of cinema, only 5 titles in Brunei and 25 titles in Laos as of writing. The lack of content from the latter five ASEAN member states on Netflix, and looking deeper at each Member States historical context, show that they are quite behind in terms of producing and distributing locally made titles. ICT infrastructures are crucial as these will help advance local penetration of global digital platforms such as Netflix, which is highly reliant on technologies such as smart gadgets and the internet.

This observation is also noted by De la Rosa (2015) as he recommended that there should be “a constant exchange of compilations of special film production services, equipment, and facilities available in each ASEAN country.” As the development of film industries in the AMS varies, facilitating close cooperation could lead to the realization of the ASEAN's objective of “enhancing regional resilience by promoting greater political, security, economic, and sociocultural cooperation’ amongst its members under its motto of ‘One Vision, One Identity, One Community’ (ASEAN Charter, n.d.).

2. ASEAN’s Policy on OTT Services

Policy also plays an important role in the advancement of ASEAN’s audiovisual media to the global SVOD platforms like Netflix. Discussions on how to properly handle OTT services in the region started in 2017 at the ASEAN Telecommunications Regulators’ Council (ATRC) dialogue. This government-led dialogue is an opportunity for the ASEAN telecommunication regulators, OTT service providers, and network service providers, to discuss their views frankly on OTT service management and regulation. One example is the 2019 ATRC OTT Dialogue in Bangkok where areas such as “OTT business enhancement, consumer protection, economic contribution and guidelines for ASEAN” were discussed (Tortermvasana & Leesa-nguansuk, 2019). However, no clear discussion was mentioned on how to address content imbalance and dominance of foreign content on ASEAN Netflix territories.

The usual concerns on OTT include whether to tax such services or not. France has started with such regulation by “passing a law to tax digital giants on revenue accrued within the country. The tax will snare several US tech firms, including Google, Apple, Facebook and Amazon” (Tortermvasana & Leesa-nguansuk, 2019). A similar policy could be adopted by the ASEAN, however, Thammasat University’s Asia Internet Coalition (AIC) views tax on OTT service providers negatively as it will “significantly hinder innovation and growth” with small local businesses and startups as most ASEAN members are just beginning their digital transformation journeys (Paine, 2019). Based on the 2016 AIC study on the impact of the OTT industry in Thailand “local OTT players generated 36.8 billion baht in value and created 29,500 jobs as part of the online content development industry” (Paine, 2019), thus, putting strict tax regulation would also negatively affect local OTT players.

The main concern for policymakers should be on how to maintain a balanced representation of ASEAN titles in Netflix catalogs to avoid the dominance of foreign content in the region’s mediascape. In Europe, due to the key findings of the European Audiovisual Observatory that “Hollywood movies are dominant in SVOD services, especially on Netflix,” policymakers revised the 2016 Audiovisual Media Services Directive proposing a “20% minimum European content quota on all streaming services” (Lobato, 2017). Recent reports state that the minimum quota is now at 30% European content (Keslassy, 2022). On the other hand, Netflix argues that imposing such quotas would hinder customer experience and creativity: “...quotas, regardless of market size, can negatively impact both the customer experience and creativity. We believe a more effective way for a country to support strong local content is to directly incentivize local content creators, independent of distribution channel” (Roxborough, 2018).

Following the European Union, imposing a minimum content quota on ASEAN Netflix catalogs would increase Southeast Asian content representation and production, and will generate economic activity in the region’s audiovisual industry. This will entail Netflix to license or acquire more ASEAN titles or fund local production of ASEAN content. In a 2022 report by Variety, it stated that Netflix was able to meet the 30% European content quota in almost all markets on the continent (Keslassy, 2022). This is a good indication that imposing quotas has a direct effect on increasing regional content which the ASEAN might consider adopting. With the region’s growing tech-savvy middle-class, ASEAN is already considered a huge market for OTT services. Global SVOD companies cannot miss such a huge market and will be forced to comply with the requirement. Other SVOD platforms such as Amazon, HBO Max, and Disney+, are also complying with the requirement of Europe's minimum quota regulation (Keslassy, 2022). Competition among SVOD platforms is another factor that will force global SVOD giant Netflix to follow regulations.

5.3. Implications of the state of ASEAN content on Netflix to the realization of an ASEAN Community

Audiovisual media plays an important role in the development of the region specifically in its goal to achieve an all-encompassing concept of integration, thus, the lack of ASEAN content in the global SVOD platform Netflix affects the realization of this goal. Netflix is the biggest global streaming service with a lot of Southeast Asian subscribers. The dominance of foreign content, specifically the USA and South Korean content overshadows the Southeast Asian titles across the region's Netflix catalogs. This causes concern as Nye (2002) quoted the observation of a former French foreign minister on why the Americans are considered powerful: "they can inspire the dreams and desires of others, thanks to the mastery of global images through film and television" as projected in the motion pictures produced by Hollywood. In the context of the ASEAN, while the technology of cinema and television originally came from the West (Lacaba, 2000), it is a fact that the residues of colonialism in Southeast Asia continue to haunt the contemporary media landscape of the region to date. A panoramic view of the ASEAN media landscape on Netflix showed the influence of Hollywood: "not all of the ASEAN's member-countries may have come under direct American colonial occupation or military intervention, but all of them have found it nearly impossible to avoid the long shadow cast by Hollywood" (Lacaba, 2000). This use of moving images as soft power saw a significant impact during the Cold War (Nye, 1990) when the US "churned out several hundred motion pictures a year and dominated box offices worldwide" to counter USSR's influence (Shaw & Youngblood, 2010). In this sense, it is appropriate to argue that those who dominate the media landscape, especially the media platforms of countries or regions, are those who have the financial capability to produce content, and in turn will have better influence than the rest of its contemporaries.

In this highly globalized and interdependent world, where new technologies and platforms have emerged, information has now also become instantly available. ASEAN policymakers should view Netflix as a potential tool that could advance community-building and awareness of the diverse cultures of the region, however, such can only be achieved if there is equal representation of Southeast Asian culture on the platform. The ASEAN people, especially those who are subscribed to Netflix, are missing a lot. How can they be introduced to the ASEAN cultures if, in the first place, there are no films or TV shows about Laos, Cambodia, Myanmar, and Brunei available? Netflix should diversify its catalog to avoid falling into the trap of media imperialism. ASEAN understands the role of media and its crucial necessity in developing a regional identity and constructing an ASEAN Community. Through its Socio-Cultural Community Pillar, the regional organization has spearheaded various initiatives, such as cultural and educational exchanges, cultural festivals, film festivals, and knowledge-sharing, to realize the construction of an ASEAN Identity. Additionally, the ASEAN sectoral bodies responsible for media and information highlight the use of different types of media including "print media (newspapers, magazines), broadcast media (TV, radio), outdoor media (advertising) and internet (social media, websites, TV, and radio-based internet),” to further advance ASEAN awareness and to better communicate the benefits and opportunities of regional integration to the stakeholders and ASEAN people (Information and Media, n.d.).

In this regard, the ASEAN highly views media content as an important tool that could disseminate information and raise awareness about the regional organization. The exchange of content has been prominent within the region, especially with audiovisual media such as films and TV shows. The region has already established intraregional exchange and trade of television content, which helped in raising awareness about the diverse cultures of the ASEAN people. For example, Filipinos were able to appreciate the culture of Thailand through the screening of Thai TV series on local Philippine television channels. Likewise, local Filipino artists such as Kathryn Bernardo, Daniel Padilla, Nadine Lustre, and James Reid rose to fame in some Southeast Asian countries particularly in Malaysia, Indonesia, Myanmar, and Thailand due to the exchanges in media content. This trade of international audiovisual content allows the ASEAN citizens to build stronger connections and appreciation of the region’s culture. Policymakers should then strengthen regional cooperation in these areas such as co-production and creative collaboration to encourage more people to engage in content creation.

The development of an ASEAN community will enable the region to intensively cooperate to become a single entity in every possible dimension (Jirakasem & Mitomo, 2017). And in studying the ASEAN community-building, Acharya (2017) argues that a “community” has two key features: First, it “implies a social, rather than purely instrumental, relationship” with key attributes such as ‘trust, friendship, complementarity, and responsiveness’ (Haas, 1970 as cited in Acharya, 2017); and second, that it is not just a group of people but a collective that displays “mutual responsiveness, confidence, and esteem, and who self-consciously self-identify” (Puchala, 1984 as cited in Acharya, 2017). This socially constructed self-identification is crucial as “one needs a sense of common or collective identity to build a true community, legitimize cooperation nationally and internationally, and reinforce the rationale for collective action” (Acharya, 2017). In the context of the ASEAN, the construction of an ASEAN Identity plays a key role in realizing the ASEAN Community, and in streamlining all aspects of the region’s economic, socio-cultural, and political-security priorities.

Chapter 6

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

6.1. Summary

In 1996, Bill Gates wrote an essay entitled “Content is King,” which talked about how content will become very important in the age of internet (Congdon, 2017).

“Over time, the breadth of information on the Internet will be enormous, which will make it compelling. Although the gold rush atmosphere today is primarily confined to the United States, I expect it to sweep the world as communications costs come down and a critical mass of localized content becomes available in different countries” (Gates, 1996)

Picking up from what Gates (1996) stated, and looking at the world today, he is not wrong in claiming that content will open opportunities for “most companies involved in supplying information or entertainment.” Netflix tapped into this idea and by providing audiovisual content online, they were able to penetrate the global community and emerged as the biggest SVOD platform to date.

I planned this study three years ago after visiting the ASEAN-Korea Center in Seoul, South Korea, and getting hold of the first issue of their journal focusing on the ASEAN Wave — a concept similar to their version of the Korean Wave. I tried to look for other references about the topic but it was only the South Korean scholars writing about it. This study was born out of my desire to investigate this emerging scholarship in the field of ASEAN Studies and hopefully, expand the literature by providing initial data to describe ASEAN's mediascape. I focused on the intraregional flow of ASEAN media on Netflix as I posit it is important to look into the amount of ASEAN films and TV shows available in the region as comparing it to the Korean Wave, where the latter was defined initially as the transnational influx of cultural products to its neighboring countries.

This study conducted a comprehensive catalog analysis to survey the amount of ASEAN content available in the Netflix catalogs of each ASEAN Member States and analyzed which countries around the world have titles that were most viewed by Southeast Asian subscribers through the Netflix Top 10 list covering 43 weeks from July 4, 2021, to May 1, 2022. Key findings show that ASEAN titles only amount to around 10% of the 5000-6000 titles available in each of the Netflix catalogs of Indonesia, Philippines, Singapore, and Thailand. Due to the lack of VPN servers available to bypass Netflix's geo-blocking, titles available from Malaysian and Vietnamese catalogs were only recorded through other AMS catalogs and showed only around 2% presence each in the global SVOD platform. No titles from Brunei Darussalam, Laos, and Myanmar were available, and only one Cambodian content was recorded.

On the Netflix Top 10 list, a common denominator across the ASEAN Member States was that USA-made films and South Korean TV shows were the titles most viewed by Southeast Asian Netflix subscribers. Locally-made titles struggled to enter the weekly Top 10 list while other titles struggled to maintain their presence in the ranks. This is telling that although there were available ASEAN content on the platform, it is USA and South Korean titles that were mostly being watched by Southeast Asian subscribers.

“Netflix is one of the few media brands of the internet era to penetrate so deeply into households and the broader popular consciousness that it has become a verb (“let’s Netflix it,” “Netflix and chill”) (Lobato, 2017). This study, focusing on the ASEAN Netflix, provided a glimpse of the state of ASEAN titles in the global SVOD platform, especially in challenging Netflix’ “global platform” status, or whether it only delivers particular country-specific content. The platform is important because there is a huge amount of Southeast Asians subscribed to it, giving such SVOD services a certain kind of power in the contemporary global mediascape. While the recent reports in July 2022 state that Netflix is losing its subscribers, current data show that Netflix was able to stabilize its losses (Pallota, 2022), proving that Netflix is still the major player in terms of OTT SVOD streaming services.

Further, this study attempted to connect the number of ASEAN content on Netflix to the ASEAN regional integration, arguing that, the lack of ASEAN titles in the global SVOD platform affects and hinders the creation of an ASEAN Community. This is primarily because the lack of content, specifically in Brunei, Cambodia, Myanmar, and Laos, amounts to a lack of representation. There is no way for the ASEAN community to understand their regional neighbors and develop a collective mind or an ASEAN Identity if there are no available audiovisual content, which presents the culture and society of a particular territory, available online. While another option is to encourage cross-border exchange and travel to physically allow Southeast Asians to get a grasp of their neighbor’s cultures, it is impractical and expensive given the current status of the world concerning the still ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. Allowing media content to flow online is the easiest way to encourage understanding, build connections, and strengthen the relationship in the region.

However, this research also briefly historicized the growth of each AMS' audiovisual industry and found that there is unequal development across the region. While the technology of moving pictures arrived early in the ASEAN, several factors such as colonialism, political instability, economic depression, and lack of policies supporting culture and the arts, hampered its further development. In this case, it is important to look at the ASEAN as a work-in-progress where policies are still being developed to transform the region as the future cultural and creative hub capable of producing, creating, and exporting competitive audiovisual content in the global media landscape, thereby allowing for the ASEAN Wave to fully thrive.

6.2. Recommendations and Future Directions

To advance the literature and discourse of the emerging scholarship called ASEAN Wave, this study's comprehensive survey of ASEAN content on Netflix hopes to become a possible starting ground for fellow ASEANOLOGY scholars to investigate the growing media contra-flow from the region. While there are several existing ASEAN contents online, the lack of attention and equal representation, and the lack of proper government policy and infrastructures for creative development, make it difficult for the flow to develop as a global wave. There is a need for the transnational flow of Southeast Asian media to be placed on the map of global media discourse. To do so, further studies are recommended:

1. Qualitative Analysis of ASEAN media content on Netflix. A deeper look into the ASEAN media texts is recommended to unravel what are the similar and contrasting characteristics of the ASEAN media. Analyzing the texts and symbols present in various ASEAN audiovisual media content could reveal common codes that would further define the description and characteristics of the “ASEAN Wave.” Further, conducting in-depth interviews and/or focus group discussions with the ASEAN citizens on (1) why ASEAN titles are not the most viewed titles on the ASEAN Netflix, and (2) why Southeast Asians prefer watching USA films and South Korean TV shows rather than local content, would reveal deeper understanding on the nature of ASEAN media flow within and outside of the region.

2. Quantitative catalog analysis of the ASEAN media in the Netflix catalogs of US and South Korea. Conversely, it is interesting to examine whether the peoples from the Global are also consuming content from the ASEAN region. My study only focused on understanding the intraregional flow of ASEAN media, investigating how Southeast Asian titles fare in the Netflix catalogs in the region. In the case of the Korean Wave, South Korean titles are being consumed locally and abroad. A comparative analysis would definitely help in crafting policy recommendations to further advance the ASEAN’s presence in the complex global media platforms.
3. A review and update of the proposal by De la Rosa (2015) on the creation of the FILM ASEAN. The FILM ASEAN is envisioned as a central regional group “to unify lead government agencies in charge of film development within ASEAN.” As each AMS has different levels of development in the cultural and creative industries, creating such an institution would have a central role to connect the region’s socio-cultural force even further. The FILM ASEAN is seen to facilitate a faster exchange of information and technical know-how to encourage local filmmakers and content creators to make competitive global audiovisual content about the ASEAN. Further, De la Rosa (2015) emphasized the need to establish a network of “cineclubs” or regional film societies to facilitate better dissemination of information across the AMS. It is high time that the region’s policymakers put more focus on their audiovisual sector as it will help advance the realization of a fully integrated region.

4. Creation of an ASEAN Open-Access Video-on-Demand Platform. The ASEAN stakeholders must come together to create an Open-Access Video-On-Demand (VOD) platform or a free streaming platform with a catalog comprised solely of ASEAN content. Developing an accessible ASEAN “Netflix,” with the support of all the ten member states, will allow voices from this part of the world to be seen and heard on a global scale. To date, there is no similar initiative available in the region which makes it difficult for interested individuals, ASEAN scholars, and even the ASEAN people to watch titles from the region. With this initiative, titles from Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar will be given equal exposure similar to their neighboring states. It is important to note that Netflix is licensing titles based on their criteria which include content quality, technical aspects, and the content’s narrative. Creating an ASEAN Open-Access VOD will promote equality which is at the core of regional integration, and will provide exposure to more titles from the region.

To date, there is still no clear definition of what an ASEAN Wave is, or whether such a thing is existing. However, there are several entry points on how to investigate this phenomenon, one such is to consider the variety of creative content circulating within the ASEAN. In focusing on the audiovisual media, this study proved, at least concerning media content on Netflix, that more work has to be done for ASEAN films and TV shows to achieve equal representation in global SVOD streaming platforms like Netflix. This study also introduced the use of catalog analysis to examine power imbalances in the field of culture and the arts. Such a method is replicable and could be utilized by ASEANOLOGY scholars further advance the region's socio-cultural pillar. This matters because the lack of ASEAN stories in the global mediascape hinders the development of an ASEAN Wave, which ultimately affects the further realization of the ASEAN Community, specifically our consciousness and the construction of our regional identity.
